

Balearics

The luxury Belvue rooftop allows you to see the beautiful scenes of Spain

With Spain working on a vaccine passport, and the UK's vaccination rollout being on schedule, it seems like Brits will be at the highest end of Ibiza's desirability scale this summer. And vice versa, since The Sunday Times reported that the Balearics will be among the six most likely destinations for post lockdown travel.

As the island's most stylish and chilled-out escape, there is no better place to spend post-lockdown Ibizan days and nights than Amàre Beach Hotel Ibiza, which will open on the 30th of April for its first full season. This grown-up paradise is beautifully located in front of the Bou Cove and houses the Belvue Rooftop Bar and infinity swimming pool, from which guests can enjoy views of the famous Ibizan sunset. And while the sea breeze and sun caresses, DJ mixes and at the push of a button, ice-cold cocktails and mouth-watering tapas are served on demand.

The pop-up rooftop restaurant, Hayaca Terrace, takes guests on a gourmet journey to South America; curated by Michelin-star chef Mauricio Giovanini, Hayaca will serve the most iconic local dishes, such as Peruvian Ceviche and Colombian style chipá. Rooms at Amàre Beach Hotel Ibiza start from £90 in a double room, find out more at amarehotels.com.
